

Presentation on Marsh Bird Monitoring in Wetlands

November 19, 7pm @ Golden Public Library

For more information, please email golden@wildsight.ca or call 250-344-5530

Marsh birds are inconspicuous and difficult to detect, but global reports suggest that many marsh bird species populations are in decline. For four years, the Columbia Wetlands Marsh Bird Monitoring Project has been conducting repeated point count surveys at 65 survey stations in the Columbia Wetlands. Project biologist Rachel Darvill will be presenting information on this project, including what has been learned about marsh bird populations in the Columbia Wetlands, and where we should go from here.

Goldeneye Ecological Services gratefully acknowledges the financial support of the Fish & Wildlife Compensation Program, and ECCO Canadian Wildlife Service for their contributions to the Columbia Wetlands Marsh Bird Monitoring Project.

Environment and
Climate Change Canada
Canadian Wildlife Service

Environnement et
Changement climatique Canada
Service canadien de la faune

